ABSTRACT

The ninth annual edition of the listing of American Camping Association camps provides information for parents on choosing a camp, brief descriptions of approximately 1,900 camps, and 5 indexes. A narrative section offers information on how to look for a camp, special needs campers, kinds of camps, accreditation, contacting a camp, budgeting, preparing a child for camp, and the camp job market for young adults. The major portion of the directory lists day and resident camps alphabetically by state. Each entry provides a camp name; date founded; address and telephone number; director/operator name; clientele--mostly school-age children, some adults and families; fees; capacity; housing facilities; optional director's comment; and date of information. Sixty-one specialized activities are noted in a separate index arranged by state, then by camp name on an activities grid. A special clientele index lists 19 special needs with camps serving those needs arranged alphabetically by state, then by camp need; notation is made for mainstreaming or specialized programs. An on-site director index, a certified camp director index, and an alphabetical list by camp name with state are also included. A parent/camper questionnaire to set goals and priorities for camping is provided and photos throughout the text show typical camping scenes. (LFL)

Exemplary Ethical Practices For Camp Directors/Owners

The members of the American Camping Association recognize and support the concept that custody of others' lives and welfare as well as the earth and its living things, calls for reverence for such life, in dedication and commitment to a higher good. Whatever form such a dedication and commitment may take, it must be essentially moral in nature.

The members further:

a. recognize and support the concept of an ecological conscience that a thing is right when it tends to preserve the integrity, stability and beauty of the biotic community.
b. recognize and support the concept that a camp is necessarily a total community within the society, with significant impact upon its inhabitants' capacity to learn, grow, develop, assimilate values, create and relate to other persons and the earth.
c. accept, respect and will be responsive to the rich diversity of our society.

The Association recognizes the Camp Director/Owner as the primary professional person assuming the greatest responsibility for actual camping practices. Therefore, the Association shall ask the person assuming this responsibility to subscribe to the following, to the extent permitted by law.

I shall seek to instill in my staff and campers not only a reverence for the land and its waters and all living things, but also an ecological conscience which reflects the conviction of individual responsibility for the health of that environment.

I shall maintain a camp membership enrollment policy without regard to religious affiliations (unless my camp is operated either by or in behalf of an established church for bona fide religious purposes), national origin, or race.

I shall hire, assign, promote and establish other conditions of employment for staff (professional, semi-professional or clerical) without regard to religious affiliation, (unless my camp is operated either by or in behalf of an established church or for bona fide religious purposes), national origin, or race.

I shall be truthful and fair in representing my camp and other camps by whatever medium of communications.

I shall be truthful and fair in securing and dealing with campers and staff.

I shall strive to conduct my camp in such a way as to build good will not only for my camp but also for the camping movement.

I shall strive to be responsible and sensitive to the local community influenced by the presence of my camp.

I shall provide a written enrollment policy for all applicants including fees, payment schedules, discounts, dates of arrival and departure, together with a clearly stated refund policy.

I shall provide for each staff member a written job description and contract including period of employment, compensation, benefits and exceptions.

I shall tell parents my procedures for promptly notifying them in the event their child is hospitalized or suffers accident or illness.

I shall maintain in professional confidence camper and staff information, observation, or evaluation.

I shall promptly consult with parents or guardians as to the advisability of removing a child from camp should it be clear that the child is not benefiting from the camp experience.

I shall refrain from actively recruiting any camper or staff member known by me to be currently enrolled or employed at another camp.

I shall honor my financial commitments to parents, staff, vendors and others.

I shall use the proper membership classification and camp registration category as may be defined by the National Board and shall use the ACA seal of accreditation in conformance with policies of the Standards Program.

I shall abide by ACA requirements and respect ACA guidelines for my profession.

Adopted by the Council of Delegates March 5, 1976, March 2, 1978, and February 16, 1980.

THE WHITE HOUSE

November 13, 1984

Dear Parents:

I'm delighted that you are looking into camps for your children. Camping offers so many varied and terrific experiences. Believe me, I should know! My camping career began at age nine and ended at fifteen, and then only because I was told it was time to leave. Had it been up to me, I would have stayed forever -- I loved it!

This past summer I had the opportunity to go to camp again. It was a fun day and brought back so many wonderful memories. I hope that your children will enjoy their camping years and that they, too, will have fond memories of a very special time.

Sincerely,

Nancy Reagan

HOW TO BEGIN

This is the ninth annual edition of the Parents' Guide to Accredited Camps. The American Camping Association first undertook this publishing effort in 1977 to help parents and children with the difficult decision of choosing a camp.

This Guide does not tell you which camp is best for your youngster. But all the information that we obtained from ACA accredited camps and printed here will make the choice easier. The Guide provides the most complete listing of ACA accredited camps published by any organization.

The Guide lists only camps accredited by the American Camping Association. Advertising is accepted only from ACA accredited camps. Accreditation is important not only to the camp, but also to parents and their children; the ACA seal of accreditation indicates the camp has met certain standards in site, health care, program, personnel, and administration. Camps are visited at least once every three years to determine if the standards are maintained. Camps may lose their accreditation if they fail to meet a minimum score.

This Guide is divided into four parts: a narrative for parents (and children) on the important steps to locate a camp, advertisers who wish to supplement their listing information, a listing of camps, and indexes.

On part of this page we have reproduced a sample listing. There also is a partial reproduction of the program chart—one of the five indexes—to demonstrate the variety of program offerings throughout ACA's many accredited camps.

While all four parts are blended together to form a single Guide, you may use each part separately.

The parents/camper inventory

It may be very difficult for parents (and campers) to choose the "right" camp—especially if this is the first time. So, a logical question is, "Where do we begin?" This book contains nearly 300 pages of information. "Which page do we turn to first?"

While you can approach this task in a variety of ways, may we offer this suggestion: turn to the "Inventory Form" on the adjoining page.

It contains some very good questions that parents and children may want to ask themselves. You might not be able to answer all of the questions. But through careful thought, you may find yourself narrowing your choices which should help you in eventually selecting a camp.

If you choose not to complete the "Inventory Form" initially, you may still return to it after you have studied the various parts of the Guide.

In the event you have any questions or need special information, page 14 contains a list of Section (chapter) offices; they can be helpful to you. Also, you may write or call the national headquarters of the ACA: American Camping Association, Bradford Woods, 5000 State Road 67 North, Martinsville, IN 46151-7902; (317) 342-8456.

CAMP—A SUMMER ADVENTURE FOR CHILDREN

Some four million children will go to camp this summer. For many it will mean returning to the sights, sounds, and friends they left a year ago; their parents look to this experience as an investment in the intellectual and emotional growth of their children. Others will have this experience for the first time. For these children, the environment, their fellow campers, and the activities will all be a new and challenging adventure.

Summer camp is most often the type of healthy experience that the campers will recall throughout their lives. William J. Kelly, a licensed psychologist and director of Counseling Associates in North Wales, Pennsylvania, an advocate of summer camp for some of his youthful patients, described his camping memories this way:

"Those personal experiences of nearly 30 years ago helped me to realize that camping can be a very positive experience in allowing a young person to develop a newly found confidence in his abilities to deal with real-life situations."

One of America's most distinguished camp directors for nearly a half century, the late Lois Goodrich, described camp this way:

"Camp is a place for a child to discover his picture as a whole—himself—to learn how he can live with children and adults; establish close relationships while meeting real difficulties and differences and working them out together; how he can fill a whole living role; take responsibilities, sharing, working, giving, receiving."

In the pages that follow, we will talk more about this rare opportunity that children enjoy—attending a summer camp. We have arranged this information in short, easy-to-read sections. Each begins with a heading. If the information under one heading seems familiar, you can skip it and go on to the next one. Or, if it is new, you can come back and reread it without reading the entire narrative. The major sections that follow are:

A word about health care
A camp philosophy—understanding it is important

The American Camping Association—who are we and what kind of background do we have as publishers of the 1985 Parents' Guide? We are a nonprofit association that traces its history back to the early 1900s. We adopted our present name, American Camping Association, in 1935, 50 years ago. ACA has more than 5,200 individual members. About 2,400 camps are affiliated with the association; this represents between one-third and one-fourth of all the camps in the United States.

The American Camping Association

The association is a voluntary professional association whose goal is "to enhance the quality of the camping experience." It is the only national accrediting body for all types of camps.

We will deal with accreditation in more detail later. But it is important to note that camps which are accredited enter the accreditation process on a voluntary basis; they make considerable effort to prepare for accreditation visits which occur at least every three years. This is an indication by camp operators to the public that they are professionals who are interested in the long-term impact of camping on all camping populations.

The association's national headquarters is located at Bradford Woods, Indiana University's Outdoor Education Center, southwest of Indianapolis, Indiana. ACA has a full-time staff of 26 persons. The association is the largest publisher in the United States of books and related materials on organized camping and conducts extensive educational programs for camp directors and staff. It certifies camp directors, serves as a consultant to government and other associations and organizations on camping, operates a mail order bookstore, and publishes the association's journal, Camping Magazine, as well as this Guide.

Thirty-two local Sections (chapters) administer the ACA programs on the local level in all 50 states; 14 have full-time offices that can help you very quickly. You will find addresses and phone numbers on page 14.

ACA members feel the national camp standards program distinguishes the association from other camping associations. Standards are the criteria by which camps are measured for accreditation. Researched and modified for nearly four decades to reflect the state of the art, the ACA standards are considered to be the most comprehensive of any camping organization in the world. While others may have similar accreditation programs, ACA has the only one that covers all types of camps. Camps are accredited in the United States and five other countries and territories.

Seventy national and international organizations, ranging from the American Academy of Pediatrics and the American Red Cross, the YMCA, and the Wilderness Society collaborate and cooperate with ACA in its work.

Starting your research

You may have filled out the "Inventory Form" and skimmed the Guide by now noticing there are literally hundreds of camps from which to choose. Is there a good next step for you? What have other parents done?

Most parents consider location, program, and cost as the three principal parts of camp selection. Personal knowledge and reputation of the director rates high, too.

The layout of the 1985 Guide will help you greatly with these items. Camps are listed by state, beginning with day camps and then resident camps. You can begin your search by turning to the states that you want to consider as first choice on your list. The individual listings also include camp fees, among other things.

If program (activities that go on in camp) is your number one priority, you will find a section near the back of the Guide that lists 61 different activities in a variety of combinations. This index identifies the camp, its programs, and which programs the camp considers its specialties.

If your child has special needs

Camping is for all youngsters across the U.S. There are camps which reach out to youngsters with special needs—the blind, diabetics, the learning disabled, and others. If your child has such needs, you will almost surely be able to find an appropriate camp.

You can begin by turning to the special index in this Guide labeled "Special Clientele." Nineteen different categories of special needs are identified, along with the camps and the states in which they are located. The listings also report whether a camp mainstreams or specializes and whether the camp is resident or day.

Camps in this index portion either "mainstream" campers or they serve only these special populations. To mainstream means that youth with special needs are integrated into the regular camp population. It is not uncommon, however, for a camp to set aside one to two weeks to serve a special population, while retaining the rest of its camping period for children that do not require special facilities or instruction.

The standards program of the American Camping Association has 53 written standards for persons with certain special needs. They range all the way from pre-admission health screening to having special shower or bathing facilities for the handicapped. In the event a youngster is on medication, the medicine is kept in the infirmary and administered by health personnel. All ACA accredited camps are required to have an infirmary or first aid facility.

There are other special needs, too, such as tutoring. Of course, some camps specialize in academics. For a child who needs some help in school, what better place is there than a camp environment where counselors are selected for their tutorial abilities, and yet there is a change of pace from the school environment.

General, specialty camps and clinics

There are some differences and similarities between general and specialty camps; clinics, however, are substantially different in organization and purpose.

Any specialty camp that is truly part of the organized camping movement will place a great deal of emphasis on group spirit and express real concern for the outdoors as part of the campers' living experience. Despite the fact that campers may spend four to six hours daily on one skill, and though some programs may utilize a number of buildings or even school campuses, the camp should be able to offer group living experiences through a cross-section of recreational and leisure activities involving both individuals and groups. With so much emphasis in some camps placed on individual development in one or two particular areas, it should be recognized that such programs require considerable time in practice and, where physical in nature, appropriate conditioning.

The general camp does not focus its program on one activity. Though there are many camps that continue to provide a wide variety of skill activities and place strong emphasis upon group living and gaining many skills, there is an equal number of general camps that provide between two and four hours a day in activity instruction for campers who seek it. These camps usually have between three and six activity areas in which the camp specializes, such as basketball, theatre, riflery, soccer, and computers. They employ persons of proven expertise for coaching/instruction. Campers choosing to participate in one of these areas are given intensive instruction, practice, and if necessary, physical conditioning for the activity. However, the balance of the day is given to supervised group activity, traditional camp programs, and individual free time.

There are advantages to both types of camps. The specialty camp tends to provide more intensive experience since the major portion of the day is given to one specific area. Though there are often campers at all skill levels, there may be more campers at any one skill level than in a general camp. Emphasis in this camp is upon the skill level to be attained and the recognition follows achievement accordingly. A youngster who is anxious to play a sport competitively or pursue an interest intensely will probably enjoy such an experience and return home with a sense of satisfaction in the progress made. Older children, perhaps in their early teens, are generally more prepared for this type experience and can handle the repetition involved in mastering a single skill. Young campers enjoy change and variety and may find a traditional day or resident camp more appealing—particularly if it is a first time experience.

The general camp with specialty areas may provide more balance and variety in day-to-day activities. The number of campers at any one skill level may be less in number, but the camper can gain considerable experience in the chosen activity. Therefore, campers who are less sure of their continuing interest in a skill area or who have a vacillating interest level can feel less pressure if the interest in one activity lessens as the camp session progresses. The greater amount of time for group interaction and other activities often balances the experience for many campers at a beginning or intermediate level. There is much to be said for the general camp which does not give such intensive attention to skills but places more emphasis upon having a happy experience.

Many clinics advertise as summer camps, hoping to gain the attention of the camper or parent. However, clinics are normally summer activity programs that concentrate all available time on the advertised activity. The focus of the program tends to be instructional and often occurs on school campuses, for instance, a basketball clinic sponsored by a college on its campus. These clinics often provide only a time-intensive, short-term program. Some clinics are developed quickly to meet the interest of a current sport or activity without any long-term commitment of site or administration.

Cottontail Ranch, CA

Belvoir Terrace, MA

Camp Happy Hollow, WI

As one tries to choose between a general camp with specialized programs and a specialty camp, there are several factors to be examined carefully. First, the camper's interest is critical to success in a given activity. Desire by the parents for their child to be a "star" is not reason enough to choose a certain camp. Second, the age of the campers will give clues as to which type of camp might be better. A certain physiological and psychological maturity level is necessary to attain established skill levels in some activities. The child's readiness is critical, too.

A word about health care

All ACA accredited camps provide some degree of health care. Camps that are accredited by ACA have to meet certain health care standards and a certain percentage of other standards. A parent should inquire as to the specific arrangements the camp has for in-camp and out-of-camp health care.

Some camps will have both a physician and registered nurses on their staff. Others will have a registered nurse who is responsible for health care, while some camps may have persons with other certifications. Camps will require a history of the child's health from the parents, and often, a physical examination as well. Camp health care personnel will review the history and examination forms and check the child's general health characteristics on arrival at camp. Camps will have routine methods of checking on the child's health during the camping period.

Parents are usually asked to sign a simple statement giving the camp permission to secure emergency treatment in case of accident or illness. Though the camp will notify the parent in such an instance, if the parent is away from the phone or out of town this statement will insure prompt treatment.

If the camper has special medications or health problems, the camp needs to be notified in writing. Any prescriptions should be sent to the camp with the camper and notations should be made on the health history form. Most camps will collect those medications and make sure the correct dosages are given as required.

If a camper has had exposure to any contagious disease within two weeks before camp, the parent should make a special effort to notify the camp director and indicate so on the health history form.

Many camps carry health and accident insurance on campers in the event that illness or accidents occur at camp which require the services of a physician or hospital. Other camps rely upon the parents' health insurance to cover such accidents. Ask the director about the camp's policies.

A camp philosophy—understanding it is important

The philosophy of the camp (director) and how well you understand it may determine if your child has a good camping experience.

The key word in this relationship is "compatability." It is not a question of right or wrong. Instead, do your child's interests coincide with those of the director? A director, for example, who emphasizes small group living, where the group makes almost daily decisions on activities, may offer less in terms of developing specific physical skills. A child that does not like competition and is more interested in friendships that could develop out of small group living may find the director's philosophy just right.

How a director develops a particular philosophy may in part come from the traditions of the camp, personal experiences as a camp director, or perhaps the accumulation of many different challenges in life. While education certainly influences a director, there is no recognized degree or course of study that specifically prepares a person to become a camp director. Preparation may cover a wide range of courses, from scientific study to social sciences. The only common certification offered directors of all types is that of ACA's Certified Camp Director (CCD) program. This voluntary certification encompasses not only education but also abilities and competencies as they are recognized by the director's peers.

ACCREDITATION—A MAJOR FACTOR FOR EVERY PARENT

When a camp director proudly displays the ACA camp accreditation logo, what does this mean to you, a parent? And what does it mean to your child, the camper? To state it simply, it means that visitors trained by the American Camping Association have personally visited the camp during its operation, asked up to 230 questions concerning all phases of the camp's operation, and reported on their findings to other camping professionals.

The standards used to make this evaluation include important health and safety concerns such as these:

—The camp's water supply has been tested and approved,
—Health histories are on file for everyone in camp,
—Any firearms on camp property are stored under lock,
—Emergency transportation is available at all times,
—Milk and other perishable foods are stored at temperatures of 45 degrees F. or less.

Standards are divided into two categories. The first category includes 13 prerequisite Standards . . . those to which all camps must say "yes." An additional 186 standards are used in the process of determining accreditation.

Accreditation, however, is more than meeting the criteria established by the ACA Standards program. It is a commitment by a camp operator to allow the camp to be examined by peers—other professionals in the camping profession—to assure that the camp meets the quality camping practices listed as standards.

Accreditation is not automatic, nor is it taken lightly by operators. Only an estimated 25 percent of the camps in the U.S. are accredited by ACA. Other camps may not choose to seek accreditation, or their efforts at achieving accreditation may not always be successful.

The standards fall into five major categories: site, health care, program, personnel, and administration. In addition, there are standards for specific program activity areas such as aquatics, horseback riding, tripping, etc.

If you were to choose to send your child to a non-accredited camp, you would be faced with the task of asking many, many questions about the quality of a program, safety, staffing, and health. But in an accredited camp, trained Standards Visitors have done that very thing for you.

While accreditation is not a flawless guarantee, it does assure the parent that the director/owner has invited outside observers to examine the camp utilizing a nationally validated standards tool. Pioneers in camp standards were more concerned that standards be viewed as a continuing education process rather than conformity to a strict book of rules and procedures. Consequently, each time a standards visitation takes place, the director, by preparing for the visit, in effect has to re-examine the camp carefully and also test it against new professional developments.

These terms may be used frequently in discussions with a director or referral service.

Some key definitions to aid your research

It will be valuable to learn some definitions to help you understand camp terminology better. We are going to define some items that appear in the listings as well as some others which you may find useful in talking with camp people. These terms may be used frequently in discussions with a director or referral service.

Each complete listing in this Guide has the camp name, the date it was founded, and the winter address, which is the office where the camp does business during the off-season. This is usually the address where camp recruitment takes place.

Director—the person who is the on-site director during the camping season. The director may also be the owner/operator.

Camp owner/operator—the person or organization that owns and operates the camp. The owner/operator may or may not be the director.

Clientele—the age and sex of the campers.

Fees (tuition)—amount of money paid by the camper to attend the camp. This is a base figure and may not include some extras.

Capacity—the maximum number of campers that a camp admits for a session. A camp may or may not operate at full capacity.

Facilities—type of housing available, such as tents, cabins, or hogans.

Director's comment—a voluntary condensed statement by the director about the camp. It may focus on camp philosophy.

Information year—the year the information on the camp was collected.

Other definitions, not necessarily included in the listings, but with which you may want to be familiar, include:

Extras—additional costs, possibly for a special camp program, laundry, bedding, etc.

Camp store—place where campers make purchases of small items such as candy, camp shirts, toothpaste, etc.

Site—place where camp is located.

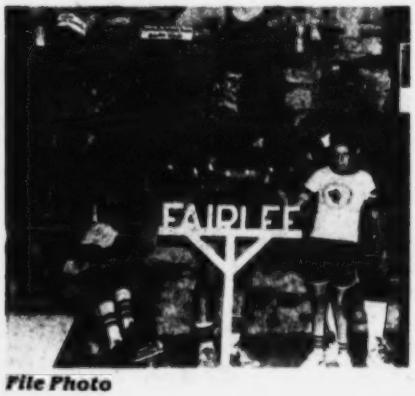
Day camps—generally transport youngsters from their neighborhoods to a site for the day, returning them late in the afternoon. Some may offer an overnight experience from time to time. Day camps operate from three to five days a week.

The appeal of the day camp is that the child is able to experience many of the programs and activities traditional to organized camping while still returning to home each evening. Day camps are an excellent introduction for children to group living in the out-of-doors. Day camps offer a well-rounded program that may be unobtainable through baby-sitters, day care programs, or recreation centers.

Resident camps (sometimes called sleep-away camps)—operate from periods of four to 56 days. They provide lodging, meals, and leadership supervision 24 hours a day. Such camps serve all ages and offer a variety of programs and living experiences.

Resident camps are that special world where the child is independent and encouraged to grow through the child's own experiences. This provides group living away from a camper's own family and offers settings and situations where both adults and youth can interact on a continuing basis.

General camps—may offer a variety of program experiences.



File Photo

Camping allows young persons to develop confidence in dealing with real life situations.

File Photo

Specialty camps—should not be confused with a "clinic" or "workshop" experience which is frequently held on a college campus and focuses on a single activity, to the exclusion of almost all others. Specialty camps that are truly a part of the organized camping movement will place a great deal of emphasis on group living and express real concern for the outdoors as part of the camper's living experience. Despite the fact that campers may spend from four to six hours daily on one skill, and though some programs may utilize a number of buildings or even school campuses, the camp should be able to offer group living experiences through a cross-section of recreational and leisure activities involving both individuals and groups. With so much emphasis in such camps placed on individual development in one or two particular areas, it should be recognized that such programs require considerable time in practice, and where physical in nature, appropriate conditioning.

Cost—The cost of a camping experience may vary from a few dollars a week at a nonprofit subsidized camp to $450 or more a week at a private-specialty camp. The type of program may influence the cost greatly.

Size—Camps may vary in size from less than 100 to more than 1,000 campers. Also, some camps are limited to one sex; others have boys and girls, brother and sister arrangements where the camps function separately. Some camps offer experiences where boys and girls are together.

Contacting the camp directly

The importance of contacting a camp directly is that you can develop a personal sense of what the camp is like through interaction with the director or camp representatives. You will probably correspond or talk on the telephone with the director; or perhaps the director will visit your home and show you a film or slides shot at the camp.

Through interviews with the directors, you will begin to receive a clearer indication of the director's philosophy about organized camping, children, and what the director believes the camp experience will accomplish for your child. We have listed here some of the questions you may want to ask a director. But a useful starting point may be the listings/program sections of this Guide and literature from the camp. Remember, however, the camp's literature is designed to put the camp's best foot forward. There may not be sufficient space in it to answer every question. Here are some others that you may want to reconsider:

What is the background of the director? How long has the director directed this camp?

ACA Standards recommend that directors hold a bachelor's degree, have completed some in-service training in the past three years, and have had at least 16 weeks of camp administrative experience.

What is the camping philosophy of the director? How does the director specifically implement that philosophy?

What does the director look for in employing staff?

What is the ratio of campers to counselors?

ACA Standards ranges vary based on the age and special needs of campers. Those Standards range from 1 counselor to 1 severely mentally retarded camper with multiple handicaps to 1 counselor to 10 campers, ages 15-17. For instance, 1 counselor to 5 campers 6 and younger; 1 counselor to 6 ages 7-8; 1 counselor to 8 ages 9-14.

What is the age of the counselors?

ACA Standards recommend that 80 percent or more of the counselors/program staff be 18 or older, and that at least 20 percent of the program/administrative staff hold a bachelor's degree.

What arrangements does the camp make for medical care and emergencies?

ACA Standards require health screening before or upon arrival at camp and recommend a nurse on the staff, written arrangements with a doctor and a local hospital, and written, practiced emergency procedures.

If your camper has a special need, what arrangements can be made for that camper?

There are 53 special Standards in the ACA Standards Program which apply to campers with special needs.

What is the number of campers in the age group of your son/daughter? This will give you an indication of the general age population of the entire camp.

Does the counselor live with or near the campers? How many does campers does the counselor supervise?

Is the camp accredited by the American Camping Association?

Describe the camp location and facilities in detail. For example, if the camp is not located near water and the camp has a waterfront program, what method is used to transport campers?

How does the camp determine the program schedule? Is the program structured or unstructured?

How much is the camp fee and what does it cover? What does the fee not include? Some special programs may require an additional fee.

What is the camp refund policy in the event the camper is required to leave prior to the end of the session?

Will the director supply you with references of parents who have had campers at camp recently?

Camp fairs, referral services

Another method of direct contact with the camp is one that is growing in popularity—the "camp fair." Sponsored by a school or some other type of organization, the fair usually allows camps to set up displays or information booths. Camps are assessed a fee to attend; the sponsoring organization then promotes the fair. Parents then have an opportunity to confer with representatives from more than one camp in a relatively short period of time.

Camper referral services have grown significantly in number over the past decade. Essentially, a referral service is a company or an individual that has contracts with camps to supply them campers. The advantage a referral service can offer is that it can do much of the research for you, matching the camp to the general qualifications you have outlined. This can save you time and expense as the referral service will filter information for you. The referral service, however, would probably limit its recommendations only to camps it has under contract.

Whether you decide to gather your information directly from the camp, or whether you decide to use a referral service, there is much information that you need. To help you chart your route, we have put together some typical questions you will want to ask.

While some referral services may charge a parent a flat fee, most referral services are paid by the camp on a commission basis which varies between 10 to 15 percent of the camper tuition fee. Not all referral services function in the same way. Some may provide interviews and go through considerable detail in arranging placement. Others may provide information by telephone, literature through the mail, and assistance with scheduling interviews between the parent/camper and the director. Some referral services have offices in metropolitan areas, while others may operate as cottage industries in the homes of the owners.

The ACA has, in fact, begun its own referral service to assist families. Called Select-A-Camp, the ACA service is unique in that parent criteria will be used to develop a list of camps from the same computer which compiles this annual Parents' Guide. The service is located at ACA national headquarters and has a toll-free line: 1-800-428-CAMP.

Questions to ask a referral service

If a parent elects to use a referral service rather than communicating directly with the camp, the parent may find some of the following questions very useful.

What are the professional qualifications of the persons operating the referral service? How long has the service been in existence?

What financial arrangements must the parent enter into with the referral service?

Does the camp pay a commission to be listed?

How many camps does the referral service represent, and how many will be contacted on behalf of the parent?

Has a representative of the referral service visited each camp that the referral service has under contract during the camping season? Was the program examined while it was in progress?

Can the referral service describe the director's philosophy?

What generally led the referral service to these camps as opposed to other camps it does not represent?

Will the referral service provide the names of clients as references?

Are all the camps recommended by the referral service ACA accredited?

What financial arrangements must the parent enter into to engage the referral service?

BUDGETING FOR CAMP

What will it cost?
Income tax credits
Tipping

Whether it is a first-time, one-week adventure in your denomination's church camp not far from home, or whether you plan for your child to spend most of the summer at a private camp many miles away, a budget can be a useful planning tool. It may eliminate some of the surprises that spring up unexpectedly, and it may help you define in financial terms the kind of camping experience you want for your child. We have listed the principal line items that you may want to consider for planning purposes.

What will it cost?

Camp Tuition—What does it include and not include?

Laundry—How often. This will influence the quantity of clothing to be sent with the camper.

Camp Store—Spending money. The camp may have a recommendation.

Bedding—Sleeping bag, sheets, blankets, pillow. Do you bring your own or does a camp furnish them?

Transportation—This not only means to and from camp but also on special camp trips.

Clothing—Most camps supply a list. Though most suggest ordinary play clothes, some camps also have a camp uniform.

Equipment—Canoe paddles, riding boots, tennis racquets, golf clubs, etc.

Special Camp Programs—Trips, horseback riding, etc.

Income tax credits

New rules on Child and Disabled Dependent Care credit were issued by the Internal Revenue Service in 1982. The rules allow qualifying persons to take tax credits of 20 to 30 percent of the money they spend for child care. Persons making $10,000 or less may take 30 percent with 1 percent less for each additional $2,000 of income until the income exceeds $28,000 when 20 percent becomes applicable for all those making over that amount.

Day and resident camp expenses qualify as deductible child care expenses, but any money spent for education or transportation to and from camp does not qualify. The limit on work-related expenses has been raised to $2,400 for one child and $4,800 for two or more children.

For a camp-related credit the requirements are:

—Parents must either be working or looking for work and must have income from working during the year the credit is claimed.
—Children must be qualifying dependents under age 15 or unable to care for themselves.
—The intent of the parent in sending the child to camp must be "child care" rather than "education." In other words, a parent who would not ordinarily provide child care for a child cannot deduct tax credit for camp.
—Taxpayer must file Form 1040.
—Taxpayer must keep a home that is shared with one or more of the qualifying dependents.
—Special conditions apply to persons who are married and living apart from their spouses or are divorced or separated.

For specific information on filing for credit, consult IRS publication #503 (Child and Disabled Care).

Tipping

One of the ACA Standards states that the camp should not allow gratuities to staff. Most camp directors select staff on the basis of their interest and concern for children, and most staff will give considered attention to each camper under their care. It is unnecessary to foster the practice of tipping and camps should pay adequate salaries to insure that staff are concerned about their duties and campers.

Parents must psychologically prepare a child for camp and be supportive, not making the child feel guilty about going away to camp.

PREPARING YOUR CHILD FOR CAMP

Parent support, homesickness
Some suggestions about clothing
In the event your child has a bad experience

One of the very important steps a parent must take is the psychological preparation of a child for camp. You have already done some of this as you discussed the selection of a camp with your camper. Of course, you may have heightened the camper's interest by pointing out some of the exciting experiences that lie ahead.

Parent support, homesickness

This may all have occurred over a period of several months because selection of the "right" camp is something that does not occur in a matter of a few days. During all of this period, as a parent you need to emphasize your youngster is "going" to camp rather than you are "sending" your child. It might be advisable to avoid statements like "I'm going to miss you," says Professor Betty van der Smissen, director of the School of Health, Physical Education and Recreation, Bowling Green State University in Ohio and a past president of ACA. Parents should be supportive and not make their children feel guilty about going away to camp. Stress the fact that there will be a lot of exciting things to do, she adds.

If this is your child's first time away from home, and especially if your child is a pre-teen, homesickness can occur. Speak openly of it before camp. Homesickness is a natural experience; and once this is understood, your child may accept it with a little more maturity. Counselors are trained to recognize and deal with the symptoms of homesickness. You can prepare your child for being away at camp, however, by letting the child spend a week-end away with relatives or friends. Children who are accustomed to spending time away from their parents are less likely to experience homesickness.

If your child will be gone for more than several days, letters from home can be a supportive experience. Check with the camp in advance about telephone calls. Most camps discourage this unless there is an emergency. Remember that one of the traditional characteristics of camp has been to offer the children an opportunity to live with others and to learn about themselves away from their family environment; it is important to help prepare the child for this experience before camp and to respect this growth experience while your child is away.

Some suggestions about clothing

Don't assume that you will need to go out and make considerable purchases for your camper to go to camp. First, get the information from the camp you have selected. That information often includes a list of suggested clothing based on the length of the camping session.

There are some general assumptions you can make:

1. Most camps require campers to bring their own bedding. Some camps allow this to be either sheets/blankets/pillow or a sleeping bag. Other camps ask for the linen for in-camp use and the sleeping bag for out-of-camp trips. Most beds will be single bed size or slightly smaller; some are double-deck bunks.
2. Towels are a necessity but do not need to be the best ones in the house.
3. Clothing generally needs to be rough and ready play clothing: jeans, shorts, shirts, plenty of underwear and socks. Some camps require uniforms and will supply the parent with ordering information. Other camps ask for certain color clothing on Sundays, or for special types of clothing for backpacking, canoe tripping, or extended trips.
4. Rain gear is important in most camps. In warm summer weather, activities often continue when light rain occurs. A rain coat that will not tear easily is important in an environment where there are tree limbs, bushes, etc.
5. A toilet kit or ditty bag with toothbrush, toothpaste or toothpowder, deodorant, comb, flashlight, insect repellant, etc.
6. Where highly specialized programs are scheduled, campers are often asked to bring their own personal gear, such as canoe paddles, boots and safety helments for horseback riding, and similar things. These will be noted in the camp literature.

Parents should inquire about laundry service if their child is going to be away longer than two weeks. Most camps provide laundry service and most assess a laundry fee over and above the camp tuition.

In the event your child has a bad experience

Though the vast majority of campers have a "great time" at camp, some children will undoubtedly return home with a feeling that camp was not "what they expected." Since the degree to which the camp experience is successful depends largely upon meshing the interests and needs of the child, as well as those of the parents, with a camp whose program responds not only to those interests but also to the temperament of the child, when these factors do not mesh the child can be unhappy. That is one reason the selection process should be carefully undertaken.

If a child writes that the "food is terrible," "There was a huge snake in my cabin," or "I cry all the time," stop and think before overreacting to the letter. Children do tend to enlarge upon what is happening at the moment; sometimes the child may want to find something exciting when writing a letter. The child may also have a brief spell of homesickness, or may want a letter from home. If the complaint seems serious or repeated, why not call the camp director and share the letter. The camp director will be anxious to follow up your concerns and alleviate any problems that are present.

If a more serious complaint arises during or after camp, and the camp director is not responsive, there are other alternatives. Directors of camps affiliated with the American Camping Association also agree to a Code of Exemplary Practices and therefore, are responsible to follow the Code (printed on the inside front cover). A formal complaint may then be filed with the American Camping Association, Bradford Woods, 5000 State Road 67 North, Martinsville, IN 46151-7902. A local disinterested party will investigate the complaint and try to bring about a reconciliation. If the complaint should be found to be valid, and the camp director does not correct the matter, several courses of action are open to ACA, including the removal of accreditation.

Some complaints may not be covered by the Code. You may want to remember the ACA is a voluntary organization and not a public regulatory body. Other resources are available to deal with complaints not covered by the ACA Code. We believe that most directors want to solve these problems. ACA receives very few complaints from the public, but is always concerned if complaints should arise.

For over 125 years, the organized camp experience has been an important part of childhood. Over 4 million young people spend all or part of their summer in the nation's day and resident camps. We are sure that you and your children will be pleased with the camp you choose and with the role that "camp" can play in your life.

TO PARENTS OF YOUNG ADULTS— THE CAMP JOB MARKET

Kinds of positions
What a camp director wants in an applicant
Salaries
Personnel policies and practices for ACA accredited camps
Job benefits
Living in a camp community
Variety of choices
Intangible benefits

One of the traditions of camp life is that often a camper who has attended for a number of years can take advantage of a leadership training program at an individual camp and later become a counselor or staff member. Or, even for young adults who have never been a camper, there are tremendous opportunities through a job as a camp staff member.

A 1982 estimate indicates that a total of 11,200 organized camps operating in the United States provided 331,000 full-time jobs, paying total salaries of $349,173,000. The jobs can be found in day and resident camps, in all parts of the country, serving a variety of ages in outdoor settings.

Kinds of positions

Opportunities are unlimited; the jobs vary from entry positions as assistants in maintenance, office, food or health services to program and unit directors, special program directors (waterfront, arts and crafts, tripping, nature), and counselors. Many of the unique aspects of the camp community which provide excellent growth experiences for campers also result in unusual opportunities for leadership growth and development on the part of the camp staff member.

The largest number of positions are in counseling. In a resident camp, a counselor might live in a regular or platform tent, tepee, tree house, hogan, or a cabin housing six to ten youngsters. A counselor may also be called upon to teach photography, archery, riflery, swimming, arts and crafts or some other program activity. Part of the counselor's responsibility might also be in helping to plan skits and stunts, banquets, campfires, camp-outs, and trips.

In a day camp a counselor might participate in many of the same activities with campers but the activities would be of shorter duration and would happen only during day hours. A part of a day camp counselor's job would probably also include supervising campers on a bus traveling to and from the day camp site.

What a camp director wants in an applicant

In addition to the qualifications desired by most employers, a camp director will be especially concerned about personal qualities because of the type of service the camp seeks to perform with children and youth. Some of the qualities that camp directors would rate at the top of the list are:

—Empathy for the camp's clientele and understanding of children and youth.
—Ability for mature self-appraisal.
—Understanding of the kind of job through past experience in related areas.
—Good self-image allowing one to work well with others.
—Outgoing personality—friendly and open.
—Understanding of personal motivation in wanting to work at camp.
—Genuine enjoyment, appreciation and respect for children and the outdoors.

Apart from personal characteristics and experience, a camp director will value an individual with expertise in more than one area. A counselor or program staff with qualifications in one area, plus ability to teach or supervise another activity is an asset. Certification in particular areas increases the possibility of getting the job—life guarding, outdoor living skills, first aid, emergency resuscitation, nature activities, or adventure programming.

A director will also look for an employee with the flexibility and the willingness to do any job, however unpleasant or dull. In the ever-changing daily demands of operating a camp, there are often tasks to be done which are not in an individual job description.

Salaries

A camp staff member usually receives free room and board for the period of employment as a part of remuneration for the position. Under a camp schedule, the opportunity to spend money outside the camp area is often limited by the time off and the opportunities available at the nearest town.

Salary for a counselor (or comparable position) will usually run from $400 to $1,000 for the camp season, exclusive of room and board. The salary may vary widely depending upon the length of the camp sessions, the type of camp, and the region of the country. Former work experience will be considered in the salary range as will certification in areas of expertise useful in camp program.

Personnel policies and ethical practices for ACA accredited camps

One of the advantages of working in an ACA accredited camp comes from the Personnel Standards which are a section in the standards by which a camp is accredited. These policies provide for a written employment agreement with each employee including salary, term of employment, benefits, and a job description. These standards also include written documents in the areas of: remuneration, time off, absence from work, health examinations and histories, insurance, conditions of severance, performance evaluation, personal conduct and any special conditions of service. Staff organization charts showing an overview of the staff pattern and lines of responsibility among staff are required.

Another plus for a person accepting a position with an ACA accredited camp is that the director subscribes to stated ethical practices. A copy of these practices appears on the back of Camp Standards with Interpretations, the book which delineates the body of regulations under which a camp receives ACA accreditation.

In the case of a possible violation of personnel standards or ethical practices, there is a national ethics committee empowered to review written documentation of such violations.

Job benefits

Many benefits are available to camp staff. College students can often obtain college credits for working at camp. On-the-job experience is especially valuable for furthering career goals as a teacher, recreation leader, group worker, nurse, health specialist, cook, or naturalist. The leadership experience gained will be an asset at almost any profession.

Most camps provide other benefits such as room and board, laundry services, and health and accident insurance. A major plus is the outdoor environment with good working conditions and the opportunity to develop new skills and make lasting friendships.

Living in a camp community

Working in a camp setting provides the unique opportunity of meeting many new people from different parts of the country and forming relationships that often last for a lifetime. There is the challenge of working with children and learning how they grow and learn. Because of the nature of the job, a camp staff position often provides staff members with many chances to learn more about themselves—and to more rapidly develop the self-reliance necessary to being an independent member of society. Many new recreational skills can be acquired through active participation and leadership in camp events. The leadership skills and self-knowledge acquired at camp can provide the young adult with needed experience to get a full-time job and begin a career.

Variety of choices

In looking for a position, one can select a camp near home or across the country—a camp on the seashore or in the mountains—a camp in dense forests or in desert country. When it comes to activity, one can select among 50 or more types of activities: from the more usual ones of outdoor living skills and sports to rock and mountain climbing—from horseback riding to ocean biology projects—from nature to pilot's training—from drama and music to aquatics specialties. As to type of camp, depending on the owner or operator, one can choose from private independent camps (operated by owners for profit), agency camps (operated by social agencies—Girl and Boy Scouts, YM and YWCA, YMHA, Camp Fire, Pioneer), church camps (operated by individual churches or a specific denomination).

Intangible benefits

Living closely together, sharing work, enjoying being a part of campfires and traditional camp programs, planning with others to create fun activities for campers—all these ultimately result in memories to be cherished. Camping is a field built on personal relationships—no other job can as easily combine the satisfactions of working with people with the joy of living in the outdoors. □

Resources to Help Your Young Adult Find a Camp Job

1. Look through the Parents' Guide and the descriptions of camps in the area where your young adult would like to work. Call or write for openings—and send out a resume to places with openings.
2. Check with the American Camping Association. The association's Camp Job Packet is for sale and contains helpful materials plus a list of local ACA Sections that operate a placement service for their own areas. There also is Select-A-Camp computer search which uses the information in the Guide and can save time by producing a list to individual specifications. (You still have to contact the particular camp for job openings.)
3. Use the list of local ACA Section contacts on page 14 of the Guide and call, asking about openings. The Section usually has a regular newsletter and often lists an applicant's availability at no charge. Encourage your young adult to attend a Section meeting, armed with a resume.
4. Place an ad in ACA's professional journal, Camping Magazine, describing the applicant's qualifications.

On telephone calls to camps in foreign countries—

Some of ACA's accredited camps are in foreign countries. If you plan to telephone a camp in a foreign country, check with the overseas operator first. The operator is in a position to help you make the call.

ADVERTISERS' INDEX

In addition to a camp's regular listing, many camps choose to highlight their programs and facilities with photos and detailed descriptions by placing displays ads in the Guide. An index of these advertisers follows.

You'll find more camps advertised in The New York Times Magazine than anywhere else.

When choosing a camp for your children, it pays to turn to The New York Times Magazine. Looking over its host of camp advertisements will give you a quick, thorough idea of the kinds of camps available...and where they're located.

And with so many to choose from, you're bound to find one that will please both you and your child.

The New York Times

unless you have completed three years of college, are experienced in a camp related activity and are sincerely interested in working with children at one of the country's finest resident summer camps.

Ken-Mont Camp for Boys and its sister camp, Ken-Wood Camp for Girls are located in the southern Berkshire Mountains of New England at Kent, Connecticut. Both its clientele and its faculty represent all parts of the United States and English speaking foreign countries. The camp has been in operation continuously on the same 500 acre site since 1924, and features a traditional, structured program for youngsters from 6-16. Ken-Mont and Ken-Wood Camps was the site of the 1978 University of Pennsylvania Alumni College Camp; a major motion picture was filmed here in 1980.

Facilities include 20 tennis courts (4 are illuminated), a 9-hole golf course, ¾ miles of frontage on spring fed North Spectacle Lake with water skiing, sailing, small craft and a complete ARC aquatic program, baseball diamonds, basketball courts (3 are enclosed in a field house), a gymnastics pavillion, soccer pitches, arts and crafts, natural science, electronics (including amateur and broadcast radio), American Indian crafts, drama, dance, and more. Backpacking, camping, trips to nearby cultural areas such as the Tanglewood Music Festival, Jacobs Pillow Dance Theatre, and numerous summer stock theatres are part of the camp program, as are trips for specific age groups to Hyde Park/West Point, Sturbridge Village, Newport, Boston, Cape Cod and Montreal.

We are an Accredited Camp Member of the Association of Independent Camps and the American Camping Association, and a Member of the Connecticut Camp Directors Association. Ken-Mont and Ken-Wood Camps and their directors are licensed by the Department of Health Services, State of Connecticut.

Well paying positions are available to professionally motivated, qualified applicants who have a love of children and a sincere desire to participate in camp life. Graduate Students and Department Chairpersons who coach are preferred. Season is eight weeks plus a four day pre-camp orientation and training course. Two physicians and 5 R.N.'s are on our staff.

NOW THAT YOU have decided you would like to be a camp counselor, do it with us. Nobody does it better. We'll keep your enthusiasm for working with children at concert pitch . . . and we'll give your fresh thinking and innovative spirit all the latitude and support it should have to make your coming summer a truly outstanding experience. If you're really good, you deserve the best. We are Ken-Mont and Ken-Wood Camps, where fun and friendship go hand-in-hand.

TO APPLY: Send resume and references to Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Albin, Directors, Ken-Mont and Ken-Wood Camps, 2 Spencer Place, Scarsdale, N.Y. 10583. Personal interviews will be conducted by the Directors or area representatives located throughout the U.S. and in Europe.

"It's so fun"

That's what the kids at Wekeela have to say about their summer in the beautiful hills, mountains and lakes of Maine.

We could tell you a great deal about the superb facilities, the exciting trips, the professional staff, and the enthusiastic campers, boys and girls alike, but the kids say it better. Here's a sample.

"I think I'm closer with some of my friends here than I am at home. . ."

"I made friends the first and second day."

"There are some really great programs. . . Tennis and waterfront. . ."

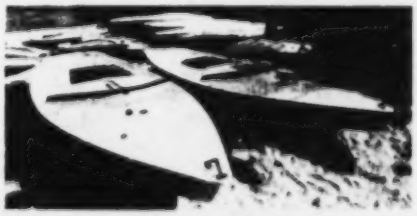
"We have a good swim team. We have an excellent swim coach. In our cabin, we have so many [magazine and newspaper] articles up and around about Beth. She's not just a good swimmer. . . I learned so much this year about determination and spirit and wanting to get it, and I did."

"There's sailboats, rowboats, there's funyaks. . . the sailing team. . . windsurfing. . . canoes. . . you can waterski. . . you can't name it all, but you can, you know, just do it. . ."

"There's one thing I learned this year and that was really cool. Ropes. I made the whole course. It's so fun."

"This camp's great. I love it."

There's a great deal more because we went to the trouble of talking to, and recording, the campers themselves.



We'd like to tell you all of what they had to say about Camp Wekeela. People is what it's all about, and the dozens of activities they can enjoy in one of the finest camps in America.

Call or write Directors Eric and Lauren Scoblionko to arrange for an interview.

Special Services For You

Families, Students, and Camp Job Applicants in the United States can turn to local American Camping Association Office for important assistance in six areas

1. Full-time local offices of the American Camping Association are maintained, with information and professional guidance to assist you. Individual camps are not recommended, but all Accredited ACA member camps are identified. Data for news media also is available.

2. There are opportunities for business persons to display goods and services at ACA Section and National Conventions.

3. The offices have information on ACA's Standards and Ethical Practices programs, and offer speakers for clubs, groups, PTAs, and organizations interested in summer camping.

4. Conventions, seminars, and training courses are held and professional literature may be obtained by men and women in youth work. ACA student membership information is available.

5. Information service is available for persons seeking camp jobs (counselors, instructors, medical, kitchen, office and maintenance staff). Just mail a stamped, self-addressed 9 x 4 envelope for job information. Applicants would do well to file with each office since different ACA member camps contact different locations for their needs.

6. Contacts are made with individual camp directors during the winter in order to update details of many camp.

Give Your Child A Chance In A Changing World!

One of the finest facilities in the nation! Old Acres, with over 50 acres of meadows, woods, winding creek and wildlife preserve, offers all the traditional camping activities and camaraderie. Plus — your child will have exclusive use of a microcomputer for at least 6 hours every day for hands-on computer learning in the spacious, comfortable education center. Dorms and dining lodge have rustic appeal, but are modernized with ample hot showers and tiled lavatories.

The healthy atmosphere and memorable social experience of camping provides a profound influence on developing young people. In addition, however, your child needs to prepare for the future. Young people need skilled, special training to achieve in the world tomorrow.

Midwest Computer Camp utilizes all major brands of computers and provides students with a hands-on exposure to robotics, graphics, color, operating systems, sound, telecommunications, and a wide variety of peripherals.

A staff ratio of one to three and a computer ratio of one to one uncaps the creativity of young people and provides for a truly academic advantage lasting a lifetime.

Whether swimming in the commercial pool, at the archery range, or on a nature hike through the wildlife refuge, campers have the opportunity to share experiences and develop close personal relationships.

On clear evenings, campers enjoy viewing the moons of Jupiter or the rings of Saturn in the camp's 8" aperture telescope. During free time, campers may browse an extensive library or enjoy an indoor game room. One, two, four, eight and twelve week sessions are available. To secure a choice of dates, you must register early! A limited number of scholarships are available. Write for the free information packet today!

CAMP CHOCONUT

Friendsville, PA
Founded in 1896

We encourage the active boy to develop his own interests at his own rate . . . to become self-reliant through small group living in a rustic, outdoor setting that fosters simplicity, thrift, and independence from electronic entertainment. Our program includes: campcraft, natural science, carpentry, woodworking, caring for animals, river canoe trips, fishing, and Choconut's unique all-day group games played in a wilderness environment.

We are proud of our high counselor/camper ratio, the excellent food, our natural, untouched, private 40-acre lake, our 800 acres of woodland and fields in Pennsylvania's Endless Mountains north, near the New York border. Our community includes 50 boys aged 9 to 14 who join us for 8, 4, and 3 weeks. Many come back year after year. Booklet.

THERE'S MORE TO CAMP THAN S'MORES

For more than 5,000 members of the American Camping Association, organized camping involves continuing education, camper safety, ethical business practices, and sound management.

ACA members have made camping their commitment. They devote their time and energy to our extensive professional education programs, our camp standards programs, and our professional ethics program.

For 75 years, the American Camping Association has been the nation's largest association of camping professionals. Our members work to make your child's time at camp a valuable and memorable experience.

ACA serves you, your child, and the camping profession.

AMERICAN CAMPING ASSOCIATION

Camping . . . it's our commitment

More than 5,000 members of the American Camping Association have made their commitment to organized camping. These members devote their time, energy, and resources to be a part of ACA's professional education programs, Camp Director Certification, and Camp Standards program.

We are the only national association that represents all types of organized camping.

HOW TO USE THIS GUIDE

In the pages that follow, you will find the information on camps accredited by the American Camping Association.

The information was obtained directly from the computer bank at the national headquarters of the American Camping Association (ACA). The data was entered into the computer from information that camp directors/owners returned as they renewed their membership in the American Camping Association. In some instances, where the listing appears to be incomplete, the information form was not received at national headquarters.

The first section is a listing of camps, with detailed information on each camp, by states; the second section includes the indexes: program listing in chart form; a list of camps that accept special populations, including those with certain disabilities or common interests; an alphabetical listing of on-site directors; an alphabetical cross-reference of camps by states; a list of ACA Certified Camp Directors. You will find all of this information beginning on the following pages:

Camp listings by states 47
Activities index 192
Special Clientele index 231
On-site directors 245
Cross-reference of Camps/States 257
Certified Camp Directors 266

You may choose a camp by state, by program, by special clientele, or a combination of these factors.

If you elect to choose a camp by state, select the state first (they are listed alphabetically) and then locate a camp which appears to be the type that interests you. To find the program for the camp, you must turn to the program charts which begin on page 193 . The charts are also listed by camp and state.

If you want to find a camp based on a particular program rather than a state, turn to the program charts on page 193 . Some 61 different activities are listed. They are identified by a general program (G), specialization (S), or by a new program (N). Select the program that is of interest to you and then locate the camps that offer that program by following across the charts.

If you wish to select a camp by specialized clientele, begin with the indexes on page 231 . Camps are listed under 19 different specialties.

Key to listings

The information for the 1985 Parents' Guide was taken from ACA membership records. To help you understand a listing, read the definitions that follow. The first words to appear in a listing are the camp's name. Other information that follows includes:

—Date: The date of the founding of the camp has been placed immediately after the camp name.
—Director: Person who directs the camp.
—Operator: Person or organization that operates the camp.

Under the heading of clientele, there are these definitions:

—Coed: Indicates boys and girls at the same camp.
—Boys' camp: A camp that has only boys as its clientele.
—Girls' camp: A camp that has only girls.
—Adult camp: Serves only adults or families.
—Seniors' camp: Serves senior citizens.
—Ages: Ages in most instances are shown by numbers; 6-17 indicates ages from 6 through 17.
—Fees: Fees are given as total cost per session. Sessions are stated in days. Fee information was collected throughout 1984 and may be subject to change.
—Capacity: The camp's normal camper capacity.
—Facilities: The kind of housing or shelters at the camp.
—Year-round program: Camp operates on a year-round basis.

Some camps may appear in more than one category because they operate more than one type of camp. Some camps have a brief additional statement submitted by the director. The final statement discloses the year the information was collected.

Camps listed in this Guide are listed as of November 1, 1984, and accreditation is valid until November 1, 1985.

Accreditation is a voluntary, non-governmental status under a program developed by ACA.

Some camps that have been accredited may not be listed either due to late payment of the camp service fee or because the Standards evaluation process was not completed at the time of publication. An accredited camp also may have requested to be omitted. For the current status of a particular camp, a parent may contact either the nearest Section office or the national headquarters at (317) 342-8456.

INDEXES

Activity Charts
Special Clientele
Camps / On-Site Directors
Alphabetical Camp Listing
ACA Certified Camp Directors

The charts on the following pages are arranged to enable a parent to quickly locate a specific type of program in a specific location. The parent may then refer back to the listing in the body of this Guide for additional information on the camp.

For example, if a parent is seeking a trip or travel camp, the parent would look under the horizontal listing and locate the trip or travel heading. Then, going vertically down the chart, the parent can identify camps that have this specialization or at least offer this program.

The camps are listed alphabetically by state, and then internationally. Resident camps have the letter "R" after their names; day camps have the letter "D."

Boldface type in the headings of the charts indicate that a broad program area is offered; lightface type indicates a more specific activity offered in that area. For example, if a camp indicates a general boating program, a parent could assume that most or all of the activities listed (or even additional ones) would be offered. If another camp offers only canoeing and not an entire boating program, only canoeing would be marked. The headings on the charts also are printed below for your examination.

Marking is done by three letters: "S," which indicates a specialization; "G," which indicates the activity is part of the general program; and "N," which means the program is new. A camp declares that it specializes in an activity is prepared to offer that activity with a staff that has special skills in that activity. Campers may be required to register in advance of the camp session with the understanding that a significant part of their schedule time will be devoted to increasing their knowledge in that area.

Other Indexes

Other indexes follow. The second is a list of camps under the heading of special clientele. These are camps designed primarily to serve special populations unless the camps indicate with the letter "M" they are mainstream." The "M" means these camps have the special populations as part of their regular program.

The third index is a list of camps and their on-site directors. This list can be used to aid the research of a person who may be acquainted with a director but does not know the director's camp.

The fourth index is an alphabetical listing of camps by states. The fifth index is a list of directors who have been certified by the American Camping Association.

Special Clientele

The camps that follow are those that serve special populations. In some cases, they serve only these populations; in others, they "mainstream"—that is, they integrate these campers into their regular programs. If the camp's name contains a letter "M" after it, this indicates the camp "mainstreams." A letter "S" indicates the camp specializes in those populations only. Some camps may serve more than one special population.

The letters preceding the camp's name identify the state in which the camp is located. The letters after the camp name are as follows: M—mainstream; S—specialize; R—resident camp; D—day camp; N—service added since the last Standard's visit for accreditation.

Camps/On-Site Directors

The following is a list of on-site directors and the camps with which they are affiliated. Camps may be directed by the owners/operators, or they may be directed by persons employed by the owners/operators. Some parents seek out a camp because they are acquainted with the director or are aware of the director's reputation. The list would be helpful in such a search. If a camp does not list an on-site director, that camp may not be included in this portion of the Guide.

Alphabetical Camp Listing

The following is an alphabetical listing of all camps in this Guide along with the state in which they are located. Some parents may know the name of a camp but not the address. Once you have located the camp, it is an easy step to locate the full information in the complete listings in the earlier pages of the Guide.

Some camp names are repeated. This indicates that a camp may be two camps on the same site—a resident camp and a day camp.

ACA Certified Camp Directors

The following persons have satisfactorily completed a voluntary program of Camp Director Certification sponsored by the American Camping Association. To become a Certified Camp Director (CCD) these persons verified, through submission of credentials to the ACA National Certification Board, their compliance with certain requirements in the areas of education, camp directing experience, and professional involvement. Additionally, each person has participated in a Camp Director Institute which provided an opportunity for examination of the person's own philosophy and approaches along with those of a group of peers. Approximately 17 percent of the camp owners and directors belonging to the American Camping Association currently are certified. The camp with which the person is affiliated also is named. In some cases, persons holding certification are retired.

Parents' Guide to Accredited Camps

Selecting a camp for your child may be the most important thing you do this year!

American Camping Association's Parents' Guide to Accredited Camps provides extensive information to help you make the choice.

This Guide includes:

- ACA Accredited Camps only.
  ACA Accredited Camps "must adhere to a comprehensive set of standards more rigid than most state licensing requirements."
  Chicago Sun—Times
- Information on each camp.
  Address and phone; name of director and operator; clientele/fees; capacity; facilities; dates of sessions.
- Specific listings of camps which serve handicapped, disabled, and special populations.
- Program activities cross-referenced to camp names.

Designed with the parent in mind. Provides the information you need to choose the right camp:

What accreditation means
How to contact the camp
How to budget for camp
How to prepare your child for camp

A Special Feature of the 1985 Guide:

The Camp Job Market

A section on camp jobs for parents of young adults and job applicants.

Kinds of positions
What a camp director wants
Salaries
Job benefits

"The bible for parents searching for a camp."
FIELD AND STREAM

. . . an amazing comprehensive directory . . . !
UNIFIED NEIGHBORS

"An excellent source . . . to seek out the right camp."
